

Guidelines for Book Review Contributors

Gender & Development is the world's first – and only – international journal to focus specifically on gender and development issues and to explore the connections between gender and development initiatives and feminist perspectives. It is published for Oxfam by Routledge/Taylor and Francis.

Contributions are welcome from all involved in development initiatives: policy-makers and practitioners, researchers, both inside and outside academia, and feminist activists worldwide.

Gender & Development aims to inform and improve development policy and practice through debating experience, identifying lessons, and advancing new ideas. In recognition of common causes of poverty and marginalisation across the world, writers focus on both Southern and Northern contexts.

Gender & Development has a constituency that spreads across disciplines and countries. As a reviewer for our journal, you must aim to reach the widest readership possible, while retaining intellectual rigour and factual accuracy, and maintaining a clear, accessible style. Essential specialist and technical terms should be defined, and acronyms explained in full. As a reviewer for the journal, you should be able to tackle complex ideas and aim at creating engaging discussions that would extend across cultures, classes and constituencies.

Guidelines for Book Reviewers

1. Reviews should be about 800-1000 words in length (or 1200-1500 words for a composite review). Please submit Word files by email, keeping the formatting as simple as possible. Please include page references for direct quotations, and avoid references to external material unless essential.
2. At the top of the review, please give full bibliographic details of the book in the following format:

Masculinity and New War: The Gendered Dynamics of Contemporary Armed Conflict
by David Duriesmith Abingdon, Oxon and New York: Routledge 2017, ISBN: 978 1 138 67410 3, 138 pp. 3.

Please ensure that your name, title, and institutional affiliation appear at the bottom of the review, and include an email address.

We welcome lively and independent reviews, but, as with all papers submitted for publication, any opinions expressed must be balanced and well substantiated. If a review is highly critical, we may offer the author a right of reply. The following questions are for your guidance only – please use them as you feel appropriate.

1. Does this book make a useful contribution to current debates on the issues it seeks to address?
2. Are the arguments convincing, clearly presented, and well substantiated?
3. What are the book's main strengths, and where does it fall short?
4. As well as a gendered analysis, does the book take account of considerations of class, race, religion, age, ethnicity, etc.?
5. Is the book aimed at a specialist or at a generalist audience? How easy is it to read in terms of content, language, and style?
6. To whom would you recommend this book, e.g. development practitioners, policy makers, development scholars, activists?

Please send your review by the specified deadline to:

genderanddevelopment.south@gmail.com

Many thanks for your contribution to Gender & Development. You will receive one copy of the issue in which your review appears, plus a pdf of your review.
